

Novel Coronavirus (Covid 19) - Help prevent its spread

wash hands
often

avoid touching
face

avoid contact with sick people

persistent cough or temperature?
stay home

catch it, bin it
kill it

Statement from Evotech's Managing Director, Mark O'Grady

Evotech, like all businesses around the world today, is experiencing unprecedented challenges due to the outbreak of Coronavirus (Covid 19). We are focused on keeping our people safe and healthy whilst serving our customers to the best of our abilities. As the situation unfolds, and government and NHS advice changes, we are continually adapting and putting in place new operational plans for our teams, putting the needs of our clients and our staff first and centre as we do so.

Whilst these are unique and unpredictable times, I can reassure customers that I and everyone at Evotech are focused on helping all our customers through this period. To that end, I have asked my team to collate useful advice, guidance and support on key challenges businesses may be experiencing, and we have shared this with our customers. We have also updated our Infection Control Policy and implemented this across our entire business operations.

The health and safety of our staff, their families and the users of the buildings we maintain is our first priority. We have been communicating regularly for many weeks with our employees on how to stay well and reduce the spread of the virus and will continue to do so in the weeks ahead.

Our team are working around the clock to make sure that the buildings we maintain remain safe to use, and where buildings are being closed, we are able to optimise assets accordingly to reduce running costs to an absolute minimum, and support an efficient and safe restart when the building is reopened. We have issued our customers with guidance on the partial or total shutdown of buildings, outlining how individual assets and systems should be managed during a partial or full shutdown.

Many of our customers are using this time to make upgrades to building services and we are currently supporting them in the implementation of these projects.

As the situation develops over the coming weeks, we will continue to adapt to Government advice and we will communicate directly with our customers on these changes, as we implement them.

It only remains to say, everyone please take care and stay well.

Mark O'Grady
Managing Director

If you have any questions relating to this article please email news@evotech.co.uk

www.evotech.co.uk | Twitter | LinkedIn

Evotech News

23rd Mar
2020